Creative Work

Significant Projects Executed

“@art gallery”, 1996 – 2002

One of the first on-line curated art spaces on the web; selected to be redesigned through an NCSA Faculty Fellowship in 2000-2001, and a two-year Critical Research Initiatives Grant from 2001-2003. The site was co-curated with Professor Nan Goggin (www.art.uiuc.edu/@art)

“the place”, 1996 – 2000

A web-site housing individual web-based artworks, it has been featured in the New York Times, the Wall Street Journal, Print Magazine, Communication Arts, and numerous recent books on electronic art. Recently acquired in its entirety by the Walker Art Center, Minneapolis, Minnesota. (theplace.walkerart.org)

“Ursonate”, 1999

Collaboration with Professor Goggin and New York painter Jack Ox to translate a visual interpretation of a Kurt Schwitters’s poem into an interactive web artwork. (www.art.uiuc.edu/@art/jackox)

“Infinity”, 1999

Collaboration with Professor Goggin and Professors Junji Kuwaraba and Masashi Kimura, Nihon University, Tokyo, Japan. Production of web site that interprets Kuwaraba’s children’s play structure designs. (www.art.uiuc.edu/infinity/play.html)

“In[side]out”, 2000

An interactive multimedia artwork, created in collaboration with Professors Goggin and Springfield, exploring the conceptualization of private and public space.

“Io”, 2001

An interactive web-based visual poem that employs artificial intelligence and database programming to converse with viewers. In collaboration with Professors Goggin and Cherry.

Ninthletter magazine + ninthletter.com, 2003-present

Ninth Letter exists in two distinct but related incarnations: as a literary/visual arts magazine published twice a year, and a website venue featuring new media and emerging literary forms not supported by the technology of ink and paper. Ninth Letter has received awards for both outstanding content and design. Co-founder, Art Editor (magazine), and Content Editor (website).

Teaching

Courses Taught

ARTGP 199, Artists and Computers

Introductory course covering the historical relationship between art and technology, and a survey of how contemporary artists are utilizing emerging new technologies.

ART 350, Writing with Video

Engages students in a comprehensive exploration of video as a rhetorical narrative medium, with emphasis on the actual production of video work. Fuses video production with the writing process.

ART 550, Writing with Video (graduate section)

ARTPH 315x, Multimedia

Introductory course covering the tools and processes for using electronic multimedia, particularly the CD-ROM format, as a medium for artistic expression and communication.

ARTPH 316, Senior Photography Studio

Individual studio problems and portfolio development for fine art photography majors.

ARTPH 331, Digital Photography

Introduction to tools and processes for electronic still imagemaking.

ARTPH 350, Photography Readings Seminar

Contemporary issues and theory in art, photography, and mass media.

ARTPH 360, Video I for Artists

Introduction to tools and processes for using video and as a medium for artistic expression.

ARTPH 498, Graduate Studio

Individual studio problems for graduate MFA candidates.

ARTGP 391, Experimental Web Studio

Intermediate course covering tools and processes for using the World Wide Web as a medium for artistic expression and communication.

ARTGP 391, Machine Beauty Seminar

Advanced course covering issues of the theory and practice of artmaking in relation to contemporary technological and cultural developments.

ART 105, Visual Design for Non-Majors

Visual literacy and design thinking for general education students.

ARTF 103, Design I

Communication design for Freshman Foundation students.

ARTD 217, 310, 410; Graphic Design Vertical Studio

Combined sophomore, junior, senior design studio.

Other Contributions to Instructional Programs

New Media Program, 1999-2007.

Co-founded the New Media graduate program in 1999, and was central to its development in the School of Art and Design. The New Media program was conceived to foster speculative research and innovative teaching in five specifically defined areas as they relate to the visual arts (new technologies, new languages, new audiences, new alliances, and new pedagogy). Initially, the program offered only an MFA degree, but by 2007 it was expanded to also include a BFA degree.

Words + Images, Faculty and Graduate Student Seminar, 2000-2001.

This seminar was organized as part of activities as a Campus Distinguished Teacher/Scholar. Participating units included the School of Art and Design, The Center for Writing Studies, English, Library and Information Sciences, Architecture, Commerce, and the University Press. Discussion topics focused on issues of visual literacy and strategies for incorporating visual communication skills into the university-wide curriculum.

Writing with Video, ART 350, 2005-2016

A general education advanced composition course that emphasizes creativity, inquiry, reflection, communication, and composition, 2005-2016. The course is comprised of 4-6 undergraduate sections and 1 graduate section each semester. Demand for the course far exceeds seats available.

Visual Design for Non-Majors, ART 105, 2013-14

Developed curriculum for a new 8-week General Education course. Enrollment cap: 70. The course filled in the first two days of pre-registration.

Other New Courses

ARTGP 199, Artists and Computers, 1996.

An introductory readings seminar that explores the historical relationship between art and technology, and surveys how contemporary artists are utilizing emerging technologies. Developed for the Freshman Discovery Program and the Campus Honors Program, the courses has proven popular with students in LAS and Engineering.

ARTNM 331, Image Studio, 1999.

An expansion and update of Digital Photography. This course now included an introduction to the World Wide Web as a medium for artistic expression and communication. Students gained basic experience with multimedia authoring that includes not only electronic imagemaking, but digital audio and video as well.

ARTNM 332, Experimental Web Studio, 1999.

An intermediate course for students who wish to gain more experience with the World Wide Web as an authoring environment. Students gained experience with intermediate and advanced-level software tools and execute more complex projects.

ARTNM 350, Machine Beauty, 2000.

An advanced seminar course covering issues of the theory and practice of artmaking in relation to contemporary technological and cultural developments.

ARTS 199, Art and Innovation: the Artists as Inventor, Entrepreneur, and Outlaw, 2006

A seminar focusing on case-studies of contemporary artists whose work challenges prevailing notions of typical practice. Students are presented with alternatives to 'off the shelf' visions of what artists do, creating in students an expanded sense of what opportunities might exist for them as practicing art professionals. Students research and develop non-traditional projects; write plans, proposals, resumes, and grants; present and promote their ideas.

Instructional Improvements

"ArtGarret", web-based resource for student artists, 1996-2001. This web-based resource housed a collection of online readings, tools and tutorials, and links to other information of use to students in the School of Art and Design.

"LightSource", web-based archive of 20th Century fine art photography, 1998-2004. This database of roughly 600 images give students convenient access to examples of the most important photographic art from the 20th Century. Organized into a series of teaching modules describing the major genres of photographic art, this web-based archive served as a resource for all courses in the photography curriculum.

- Developed and gained approval for eleven new permanent courses: seven courses for non-majors (as part of a proposed A+D Minor), two Industrial Design courses, and two Foundation courses
- Gained Gen Ed approval for six new permanent courses associated with the proposed A+D Minor. Gen Ed proposals for two additional new courses are still pending.
- Developed A+D Minor: designed first iteration of Minor, worked with A+D faculty through multiple drafts, guided school towards consensus and approval. Draft submitted to FAA September 2012. Approval pending.
- Lead BFA Primary/Secondary curricular design: Chaired ad hoc committee that designed a curricular structure to support students declaring Primary and Secondary concentrations. Outlined and communicated the details of this initiative to both leadership groups and rank and file faculty.

- Lead 2+2 Course Load Initiative: Outlined and communicated the details of this initiative to both leadership groups and rank and file faculty; gained faculty consensus and approval to seek college approval.
- Served on ten committees: five A+D committees, including Chair of Art Ed search and Program Chairs committee; four campus committees; one FAA committee Art Education Program/Division, Acting Chair Art Education Faculty Search, Chair Program Chairs Committee(+ Graduate Committee), Chair Ad hoc Committee on BFA Primary/Secondary Concentrations, Chair Commencement Committee, Co-chair, Operations Committee.

- Mentored new staff: Rachele Riley (Assistant Professor) and Marit McCluske (Lecturer)
- New policies & procedures: The program faculty worked together to draft new Policies and Procedures that more accurately reflect the interests and practices of the current faculty. This is particularly important for the three faculty currently on tenure track.
- New curriculum: The group developed a renewed and forward-looking new program of study that is both more timely and more flexible. In addition to representing an improved GD curriculum, the structure of this program of study could serve as a model for other programs in the school.
- New grad students: The MFA program had been very small over the past few years, with only one student continuing next Fall. There is a strong desire for this program to grow, and this past admission cycle the group worked very hard to recruit a sizeable and strong incoming cohort. We were able to admit and fund five new students, which will make for a strong core group of six students next year. This will be a powerful plus for recruiting additional strong candidates in the future.
- More new staff: Recruited two new international female candidates to fill adjunct positions. These two new hires into the design group significantly bolstered the teaching capacity, skills, and intellectual capital of this group.

- Strategic Planning Retreats – coordinated two retreats:
 - A summer mini-retreat for FAA unit administrators. This meeting focused on outlining the economic and cultural forces impacting the future of higher education. Participants also worked to identify current issues, obstacles, and priorities for FAA. As a result of this event, I was also invited to present and participate at August faculty retreats for Music and Theatre. This work set the stage for the Fall strategic planning process.
 - A college-wide Curriculum and Learning retreat tied to the strategic planning process. This October event was attended by more than 50 faculty from across FAA. Participants discussed and identified issues, obstacles, and opportunities that the strategic planning process should address. The lengthy and detailed notes that came out of this process formed the basis for drafting the 3-year strategic plan.
- Strategic Planning Task Force Tied to the retreat activities outlined above, as a member I participated in a series of nearly weekly meetings of the Task Force. Our work included the broad framing of the Fall retreats, leadership roles during retreats, analysis and synthesis of the subsequent notes, and the eventual writing of the strategic plan draft that was delivered during a public presentation in December. Following this, the Task Force then worked during the Spring semester to finalize the draft based on faculty and staff responses. Near the end of the semester, the Task Force was re-constituted as a Steering Committee.
- Online Summer Course Development
 - Starting August of 2013 I worked to develop an RFP that would give faculty across FAA equal opportunity to propose new online courses for delivery during the Summer 2014 session. From the very beginning, this initiative involved close coordination and some degree of oversight of the FAA Educational Services team. In early October proposals were reviewed and six courses were selected for development. I then worked with the Educational Services team to develop a clear process and development timeline. During the Fall semester one cohort member dropped out, and during the Spring semester one cohort member requested that launch of his course be deferred until Summer 2015. I oversaw the launch of these courses on June 16, 2014. Two of these courses were at, or near their 60-seat enrollment caps. Two other courses had lower enrollments. Net revenue from these offerings was approximately $120,000. Also during the summer of 2014 I worked with the Educational Services team to develop a proposal for a second round of online course development for 2014-15 that would build on lessons learned from the first development cycle, particularly in terms of identifying possible instructors and/or courses that have a good chance of generating strong enrollments.

- College Committees
 - My work as Chair of the FAA Courses & Curricula committee focused on a simplified FAA Minor proposal and early discussion of a possible FAA MA. Details of this work was outlined in a committee report delivered to the college. During this summer I continued to work with a group convened by Jan Erkert, in her role as a member of the Administrative Council, to further conceptualize ideas around the MA.
 - The Lorado Taft Lectureship committee, in addition to reviewing funding applications, also devoted significant discussion to FAA needs and goals surrounding the support of visiting lectures. Details of these deliberations, and recommendations, are in a yearly report already delivered to the college.
- Campus Committees
 - In my role as a Dean's Fellow, I served on the campus General Education Board. Beyond the usual work of reviewing applications to approve courses for Gen Ed credit, I also was a strong advocate of a new philosophical vision of Gen Ed that places Design in equal partnership with the Sciences and the Humanities. This proposal was included in the Board's yearly report to the Provost.
